American Frozen Food Institute's Corey Henry Elected to Public Affairs Council Board of Directors; Named Council "Volunteer of the Year"

McLean, VA – American Frozen Food Institute (AFFI) Vice President of Communications Corey Henry was recently named "Volunteer of the Year" by the Public Affairs Council, and elected to a two-year term on the council's board of directors.

Henry was named "Volunteer of the Year" in recognition of support he has provided to the council through presentations made at major grassroots and communications conferences in 2011; participation in council professional development seminars; and his service on council advisory panels.

"On behalf of the American Frozen Food Institute (AFFI), I congratulate Corey on being named the Public Affairs Council's Volunteer of the Year and on his election to the council's board of directors," said AFFI President and CEO Craig R. Naasz. "The council's board includes an impressive roster of corporate and business association leaders committed to enhancing the practice of public affairs, and AFFI is honored to be a part of that effort through Corey's active involvement."

The Public Affairs Council is a non-partisan, non-political association for public affairs professionals. Its mission is to advance the field of public affairs and provide members with the training and information resources needed to achieve success while maintaining the highest ethical standards.

Members of the council include Fortune 500 corporations, emerging growth companies, trade associations, advocacy groups and consulting firms. The award presentation and board election took place at the council's Oct. 20 board of directors meeting in Laguna Beach, Calif.
